

Washington Post Quotes Trevor Potter on Democratic Candidate Corporate Donations

08.02.2018

The Washington Post

Corporate donations have emerged as a new litmus test for Democratic candidates. In ads, stump speeches and debates, scores of politicians are pledging to reject corporate PAC donations. But the pledge may be more symbolic than financial.

...

"It's a smart political move," says Trevor Potter, a former Republican chairman of the Federal Election Commission who has criticized the Citizens United ruling. "You're not giving up much by forswearing PAC contributions and you are able to make the political point that you are opposed to the Washington influence buying system."

Mr. Potter also leads the Political Law Group at Caplin & Drysdale.

For the full article, please visit The Washington Post's website.

Excerpt taken from the article "Corporate Donations Are New Test for Democratic Candidates" by Lisa Lerer for Associated Press.

Attorneys

Trevor Potter

Related Practices/Industries

Exempt Organizations

Political Law